INTRODUCTION.

This is the fifth biennial edition of the Dual City Blue Book, and the publishers feel satisfied that it is an improvement even upon the high standard of excellence established by its predecessors; such an improvement as could come only from experience.

The Blue Book is a necessity in metropolitan life because it forms the only reliable social guide for well-regulated households. It is as useful and necessary in the home as the business directory is in the office or store, and all intelligent individuals who consider the social duties of life worth observance should provide themselves with such a book of reference, for the improper pronunciation or spelling of names in conversation or correspondence is as much a mark of illiteracy as bad grammar. This work proves of especial value in providing latest addresses; it is six months later than the city directories of the two cities, and being thus midway between the issues of these necessary publications is highly appreciated alike by the ladies and the business community.

It is not intended that this work shall be a list of "blue bloods," nor do the publishers desire to figure as social censors, to dictate who shall be the invited guests, or to select the associates for any household, but to present the names of the most prominent people in the Twin Cities; to produce a book containing the correct spelling of proper names and the latest addresses of those who will be sought by the classes who require such a work, and to present the information in a form that will be found convenient for use in the best homes.

The names are arranged alphabetically and again numerically by streets. To this street classification the publishers desire to call especial attention, it being the only method of ascertaining the names of the inhabitants of any particular house, street, ward or locality. Ladies will find it of great value in making out calling lists or in sending out invitations, and merchants and others will find it useful in making up routes for the delivery of merchandise.

In the miscellaneous portion of the book will be found the names of the officers of each department of the city government, as members of the Assembly and Board of Aldermen, Board of School Inspectors, Board of Park Commissioners, Fire Department, etc.; the number and location of all the fire alarm boxes. A complete church directory with the location of each church, the name and residence of its pastor, is given. A list of social clubs with the names of executive officers;

the personnel of the press, a list of libraries, a complete street directory, and the name and location of all public parks and grounds; a diagram of seats and boxes in the best theatres. A list of all cable and electric car lines, and a map showing the general direction and terminal boundaries of each are included.

The Shopping Guide consists of an alphabetical list of all trades and professions represented in the cities, with the names of one or more prominent and reliable dealers, and will be found very convenient.

The extremely difficult task of canvassing and collecting information has been more thoroughly systematized with each succeeding issue of the book; and being familiar with the wants of the people, and having most ample facilities for the execution of such work, the publishers are confident that the results of their efforts will bear favorable comparison with any similar production in the United States. The data has not been copied from other publications nor obtained by circulars, but has been secured by personal solicitation from the individuals themselves in a thorough and systematic canvass of the city.

Only directory men of experience have been employed in the canvass and compilation, and the correct spelling of names and addresses of all persons enrolled may therefore be relied upon. The greatest care has been used in selecting names, and although it is possible some names which have been eliminated might have been included and others perhaps which are included might have been omitted, without injury to the book, the approval of preceding editions of the book indicates that it meets the wants of its patrons as a work of reference.

The publishers are thankful for the liberal patronage, the uniform courtesy extended to their representatives, and other evidences of the increasing popularity and usefulness of their work.

THE DUAL CITY.

Nature and art, the work of the ages and the hand of man, the bounty of creation and the magic of accumulated and accumulating wealth, combine to render attractive to the visitor and delightful to the resident that famous centre of population and of growth in the refinements of art and culture which lies within a radius of twenty miles from the point where the waters of the Minnesota and those of the Mississippi mingle with each other. For considerably more than a quarter of a century writer after writer had described this region as the paradise of the tourist. The attractions of its lakes and woods and streams were dilated upon at length, and the space wherein now lies the Dual City was urged upon the notice and the favor of the public, with something of the same arguments and the same rhetoric that are spent upon the wonders of the Yellowstone, or the fine mountain scenery that lies along the great transcontinental routes. In a word, the places which are the pride and boast as well as the seat of prosperity in Minnesota became most widely known as places of resort rather than as places of residence. Nor can this be wondered at when one remembers the treasury of natural beauties which are collected here, and which are heightened rather than impaired by the rapid advances of material prosperity. In this space still lie the more than twenty beautiful lakes which were famed and chronicled years and years ago. And though the surrounding scenes have lost something of their primitive wildness, this is far more than compensated for by the addition of all the comforts and luxuries that attend upon the development of civilization, the rise of great industries, and the advance of civilization. In another section of the country the pleasures of society and social development are to be sought in large cities, placed for the most part amid surroundings repugnant to health or taste, at the dictation of the requirements of commerce; the pure pleasures of nature are sought elsewhere, in the Adirondacks or the White mountains, or at some one of the thousands of more or less fashionable watering places. It is the peculiarly happy lot of the residents of the Dual City and its environs that all that which is elsewhere gained at the price of annual tiresome wanderings lies ready at their gates. The concentration here of metropolitan wealth and population promotes social enjoyments and insures a high standard of social life, while it has added to instead of detracting from those natural charms which long ago made this the goal of hosts of travelers.

Still at the mouth of the Minnesota rise the walls of Fort Snelling, now softened into harmonious tints by the mellowing pencil of time. Still above the green of foliage and the glint of water are seen the white cliffs and the ancient towers, with the nation's flag, a bright bit of color, floating over all. But the scene, appealing as strongly as ever to the æsthetic sense, conveys now no thought of siege or sally. The frontier blockhouse has become an important army post, where are quartered the officers of a department with their families. The beauty of the old days is there, but to it has been added a new element — the beauty of cultivation, the possibility of social enjoyment, and all the humanities that attach themselves to the aggregation of peoples in great centres. Beautiful Minnehaha still casts upon the winds her silver veil, and every accessory is offenseless to the artistic sense. But where hundreds gazed upon the famous waterfall a few years ago, thousands now are visitors; and in brief space, by the authority of the state, this spot will become the centre of a park such as will have few equals anywhere. Minnetonka has suffered no subtraction of her charms, although the name has now become a familiar one in every corner of the land. Not a feature of her loveliness is marred; her winding channels, wooded shores, sequestered coves and magnificent islands, all are there. But these, too, the wand of wealth and civilization has touched and gifted with a new and higher character. Cottages and villas, witnessing the most exquisite taste, throng the shores. Mammoth hostelries might invite an army to comfortable entertainment. Multiplied facilities for transportation supply abundant means of access. With every season there come new and greater throngs of visitors from abroad. And here the social arts and graces hold their court. White Bear, with its similar attractions, its charming walks and fresh breezes and ever-sparkling waters, repeats the same story of the delights of watering place life combined with the conveniences of home and environed by the atmosphere of a great city. Yet this to the people of these cities is not a "resort," is not some spot to be reached by the sacrifice of comforts, the inconveniences of travel and the formalities of introduction to a new society; it is, in fact and in essence, only a portion of their home. And all within the circle, a few of whose points have been thus hastily sketched, enjoy the same rare fortune. The rich fields and pleasant hills that lie between, the rolling intervals that stretch up to the interurban boundaries on either side, the charming coppices, the glorious heights from which one sweep of the eye takes in an area of miles, with rival towers rising on either hand in the dim distance—all this with attractions undestroyed, but rather perennially new and perennially heightened, is the heritage of the people whose lines have fallen in the pleasant places of the Dual City.

The edict which is to make this the centre of urban life in the Northwest, as well as the centre of its natural beauties, has already gone forth. At the head of navigation must be gathered the commerce of the great valley, and through this gateway passes that of the further Northwest. An unequaled water power has built up manufactures that have outrun all competition, and are ever adding to themselves in a geometrical progression. With one-fifth of the population of the state busied within this fateful circle, what could ensue but that marvelous development which has taken by surprise even a nation accustomed to the miracles of enterprise! Hither drifts the commerce of some of the mightiest railway systems of the continent. Here is the clearing house for the financial operations of millions. Here is the centre of supply and of distribution from which flows the golden stream of wealth. Statistics everywhere tell of these movements of the age in their own potent language. And they have brought with them their invariable accomplishments, social development, appreciation of literature and the arts, a newer and broader field for intellectual intercourse, a wider humanity. It is toward the increase of those metropolitan features that the future points. In what is called the interurban tract, Hamline has become a social centre on the one side, while on the other lies Macalester, with the bright and growing district of Merriam Park near by. The establishment of state fair grounds within the dual area aids this concentration of population and improvement. The selection of another portion for a state park swells the tide. The destiny of a metropolis is already upon the Dual City. Possessed beyond recall of the advantages and beauties given by nature, assisted by the enterprise of the most vigorous race the world has ever seen, gathering impetus and momentum with the progress of each year, soon is the Dual City to behold mirrored in its fortune the fulfillment of that daring prophecy of one of America's great statesmen: "Here is the place, the central place, where the agriculture of the richest region of North America must pour out its tributes to the whole world. In our day, studying, perhaps, what might have seemed to others trifling or visionary, I had cast about for the future and ultimate central seat of the power of the North American people. I had looked at Quebec, New Orleans, at Washington and San Francisco and Cincinnati and St. Louis, and it had been the result of my conjecture that the seat of power for North America would yet be found in the valley of Mexico, and the glories of the Aztec capital would be surrendered in its becoming ultimately and at last the capital of the United States of America. But I have corrected that view; I now believe that the ultimate, last seat of government on this great continent will be found somewhere within a circle of radius not very far from the spot on which I stand, at the head of navigation on the Mississippi River."

We have everything in the Music Line at reasonable prices. That the quality is right goes without saying. It is on everybody's lips, that "IF YOU GET IT AT DYER'S IT'S GOOD."

IF YOU GET IT AT DYERS IT'S GOOD

509-511 NICOLLET AVE., MINNEAPOLIS,

W. J. DYER & BRO.

148-150 EAST THIRD ST., ST. PAUL.

Hasty and unauthorized introductions should be avoided; there should at least be some reason to believe that an introduction would be agreeable to both parties.

On meeting after an introduction, it is the part of the lady to acknowledge the acquaintance by recognition.

Among intimate acquaintances it is immaterial who bows first.

Persons usually limit their recognition of each other to a bow.

The custom of shaking hands is gradually disappearing from society. A lady is not expected to shake hands with a gentleman upon introduction, nor with a caller when he leaves. A gentleman has no right to extend his hand first to a lady. Friends shake hands without regard to rules.

At a social gathering a polite bow of recognition is sufficient, and better than shaking hands with all whom you happen to meet.

CALLING.

When making a call, a gentleman will carry his hat into the parlor in his hand. If his call is prolonged, he may place his hat on a table, but he should not allow his hostess to attend to this.

When a caller enters the hostess should rise, and may offer him her hand if she wishes. When he leaves, she should accompany him to the door of the drawing-room, if, as is usual, there is no servant to open the door. Guests whose age entitles them to special respect should be accompanied to the front door.

A formal call should not exceed a quarter of an hour.

Guests who meet in the same drawing-room may converse together without introduction, but no future recognition is necessary.

Calls in return for invitations received should be made within eight days after the event. Party calls and dinner calls are properly made within three or four days.

If the hostess has a day the call should be made on her first day after the reception.

First calls are void if not returned within a month.

Formal calls are made between 1 and 6 P. M., in the winter, not after dark. Ladies not receiving should be "Not at home;" the formula "Begs to be excused" is not polite.

A lady, in calling, is given a seat beside the mistress of the house Gentlemen callers find chairs for themselves.

When a lady has a day, a call on her should be made on her day i possible.

Married men who wish to be considered "in society" should cal with their wives once or twice a year on their friends.

It is not polite to invite a lady to an entertainment at your hous if you have not called on her; an invitation cannot take the place o a visit, except in the case of a lady whose age gives her privileges.

A lady leaves her husband's cards with her own; her address shoul not be on her card unless she is a widow.

A card should be left for each person called on, but not more tha three cards at any one house.

Residents will first call on strangers.

Strangers should send cards with their address to all acquaintance whose visits they desire. These cards may be sent by post.

All cards, left personally, should be turned down, either across th end or at the corner.

Cards left at receptions are never turned down.

A lady not in her own house does not rise on the departure of othe visitors.

When making calls avoid anything either in conversation or ac tion calculated to excite unfavorable remarks. Boisterousness i especially to be avoided; so are over-loud talk, whispering, criticism on religious subjects and political disputations. It is exceedingly ill-bred to repeat scandal or to discuss people or topics of questionabl character.

IN PUBLIC.

As much care should be taken to exhibit good breeding in publi places as in drawing-rooms or at formal receptions. A true lady o gentleman never forgets the conventionalities of life under any cir cumstances. Always be considerate of the rights and feelings o others. While it is barely permissible for a gentleman to smoke i the streets, it would be exceedingly rude to smoke in the compan of ladies.

INVITATIONS.

All invitations require an answer. For receptions where the number is limited, such as dinners, etc., the answer must be sent immediately.

DINNER PARTIES.

Guests should arrive at dinner parties five or ten minutes before the hour named in the invitation.

On going in to dinner, the gentleman of the house passes first with the lady who is the oldest, or the stranger, or for whom the dinner is given, on his arm. At table he places her on his right. The hostess brings up the rear on the arm of the most distinguished gentleman guest, to whom she gives the place at her right at the table. The second places are at the left of the host and hostess.

Cards, plain or ornamental, should be placed at each place with the name of the occupant.

When dinner is over, the gentlemen again offer their arms to the ladies and conduct them to the drawing-room, where coffee is served. After coffee, the gentlemen who smoke retire with the host to the smoking-room.

DRESS FOR GENTLEMEN.

Evening dress is always in order after dark, never in the day time. Either black or white ties may be worn with full dress; for balls a white tie is better.

For formal calls, day receptions, etc., the Prince Albert coat is best.

Gentlemen are expected to wear gloves on all formal occasions.

Gentlemen who accompany ladies to the theatre at night should always appear in evening dress.

GENERAL.

Look at those by whom you are addressed.

Do not boast of your birth, education, financial affairs, or your influential friends.

To frequently repeat the name of the person with whom you are conversing implies too much familiarity.

DIRECTIONS FOR GIVING AN ALARM OF FIRE.

Key-holders will be particular to observe the following rules:

To give an alarm, go to the nearest box, open the door, pull the hook to the bottom of the slot once, and let go; then close the door.

Do not pull the hook if the fire bell or small bell in the box is striking, as that indicates an alarm has already been given.

Key-holders, upon changing their locations, will please return key, or leave word at office of Superintendent of Fire Alarm Telegraph, corner Eighth and Minnesota.

The alarm is struck on the engine house gongs and Market-house bell in this way: Box 34 would be indicated by 3 blows (1—1—1), with a pause of 2 seconds between each blow, then a pause of 6 seconds, followed by 4 blows (1—1—1—1). This alarm is repeated 4 times, with a pause of 14 seconds between each round, thus giving the alarm from Box 34 four different times.

BEACON LIGHTS OF HISTORY.

By JOHN LORD, LL. D.

Now completed in eight octavo vols., large, handsome type, cream-laid paper, broad margins, in which the history of the world for the past 5,000 years (from Abraham to the present) is portrayed in the consideration of 3,000 of the world's most noted men and women, who as guiding signals or warning fires "cast their blaze afar," as BEACON LIGHTS, marking out the promontories and headlands of history.

There is no such condensed, yet picturesque and readable, history of the world extant as these volumes offer. The study of history would be considered a pleasure and not a burden if these volumes were placed at the disposal OF EVERY STUDENT. THEY SHOULD BE IN EVERY LIBRARY.

READ WHAT OUR OWN PEOPLE SAY ABOUT "BEACON LIGHTS:"

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION, ST. PAUL, MINN., Jan. 16, 1893.

MR. F. H. FARNHAM, Minneapolis.

Dear Sir: Dr. Lord's "Beacon Lights of History" have been familiar volumes in my family library for several years. The broad and liberal spirit in which all characters and problems are treated, the graphic manner of their presentation and the comprehensiveness of the list of subjects make them at once most instructive and delightful reading for the family and the student.

Very truly, D. L. KIEHLE, Supt. Public Instruction.

I concur in the above. SMITH BAKER, Pastor Park Ave. Church.

I can most heartily indorse what D. L. Kiehle has said in relation to Dr. Lord's Beacon Lights of History. J. S. PILLSBURY.

I concur. The work is an excellent one. CYRUS NORTHROP, President University of Minnesota.

ST. PAUL, MINN., Jan. 9, 1893.

I have had Dr. Lord's first volumes in my library ever since their publication and value them most highly. I often turn to them in my historical studies, always with profit since they are reliable. They are the result of the life-work of a patient and accurate scholar. Moreover, he had the true historical instinct. He went to the right sources for his facts; knew well what to accept and what to reject; had the imagination that enabled him to supply the missing links; weaving them into unity and clothing them with warm flesh and blood, so that you seem to stand in the presence of the great personality, which he aims to portray, while doing justice to his subject. His judgments are fair; his whole narrative is wrought in the calm, cool air of conscientious scholarship. His style is chaste; his language pure as spring water. One can look down through forty fathoms and see his shining thought and his whole method leaves nothing to be desired. I commend these books most heartily to all who wish to become familiar with the great lights of human history.

ALBERT HAYFORD HEATH, Pastor Plymouth Church,

The above expresses my sentiments. J. WATSON SMITH.

INTRODUCTION.

This is the fifth biennial edition of the Dual City Blue Book, and the publishers feel satisfied that it is an improvement even upon the high standard of excellence established by its predecessors; such an improvement as could come only from experience.

The Blue Book is a necessity in metropolitan life because it forms the only reliable social guide for well-regulated households. It is as useful and necessary in the home as the business directory is in the office or store, and all intelligent individuals who consider the social duties of life worth observance should provide themselves with such a book of reference, for the improper pronunciation or spelling of names in conversation or correspondence is as much a mark of illiteracy as bad grammar. This work proves of especial value in providing latest addresses; it is six months later than the city directories of the two cities, and being thus midway between the issues of these necessary publications is highly appreciated alike by the ladies and the business community.

It is not intended that this work shall be a list of "blue bloods," nor do the publishers desire to figure as social censors, to dictate who shall be the invited guests, or to select the associates for any household, but to present the names of the most prominent people in the Twin Cities; to produce a book containing the correct spelling of proper names and the latest addresses of those who will be sought by the classes who require such a work, and to present the information in a form that will be found convenient for use in the best homes.

The names are arranged alphabetically and again numerically by streets. To this street classification the publishers desire to call especial attention, it being the only method of ascertaining the names of the inhabitants of any particular house, street, ward or locality. Ladies will find it of great value in making out calling lists or in sending out invitations, and merchants and others will find it useful in making up routes for the delivery of merchandise.

In the miscellaneous portion of the book will be found the names of the officers of each department of the city government, as members of the Assembly and Board of Aldermen, Board of School Inspectors, Board of Park Commissioners, Fire Department, etc.; the number and location of all the fire alarm boxes. A complete church directory with the location of each church, the name and residence of its pastor, is given. A list of social clubs with the names of executive officers;

the personnel of the press, a list of libraries, a complete street directory, and the name and location of all public parks and grounds; a diagram of seats and boxes in the best theatres. A list of all cable and electric car lines, and a map showing the general direction and terminal boundaries of each are included.

The Shopping Guide consists of an alphabetical list of all trades and professions represented in the cities, with the names of one or more prominent and reliable dealers, and will be found very convenient.

The extremely difficult task of canvassing and collecting information has been more thoroughly systematized with each succeeding issue of the book; and being familiar with the wants of the people, and having most ample facilities for the execution of such work, the publishers are confident that the results of their efforts will bear favorable comparison with any similar production in the United States. The data has not been copied from other publications nor obtained by circulars, but has been secured by personal solicitation from the individuals themselves in a thorough and systematic canvass of the city.

Only directory men of experience have been employed in the canvass and compilation, and the correct spelling of names and addresses of all persons enrolled may therefore be relied upon. The greatest care has been used in selecting names, and although it is possible some names which have been eliminated might have been included and others perhaps which are included might have been omitted, without injury to the book, the approval of preceding editions of the book indicates that it meets the wants of its patrons as a work of reference.

The publishers are thankful for the liberal patronage, the uniform courtesy extended to their representatives, and other evidences of the increasing popularity and usefulness of their work.

THE DUAL CITY.

Nature and art, the work of the ages and the hand of man, the bounty of creation and the magic of accumulated and accumulating wealth, combine to render attractive to the visitor and delightful to the resident that famous centre of population and of growth in the refinements of art and culture which lies within a radius of twenty miles from the point where the waters of the Minnesota and those of the Mississippi mingle with each other. For considerably more than a quarter of a century writer after writer had described this region as the paradise of the tourist. The attractions of its lakes and woods and streams were dilated upon at length, and the space wherein now lies the Dual City was urged upon the notice and the favor of the public, with something of the same arguments and the same rhetoric that are spent upon the wonders of the Yellowstone, or the fine mountain scenery that lies along the great transcontinental routes. In a word, the places which are the pride and boast as well as the seat of prosperity in Minnesota became most widely known as places of resort rather than as places of residence. Nor can this be wondered at when one remembers the treasury of natural beauties which are collected here, and which are heightened rather than impaired by the rapid advances of material prosperity. In this space still lie the more than twenty beautiful lakes which were famed and chronicled years and years ago. And though the surrounding scenes have lost something of their primitive wildness, this is far more than compensated for by the addition of all the comforts and luxuries that attend upon the development of civilization, the rise of great industries, and the advance of civilization. In another section of the country the pleasures of society and social development are to be sought in large cities, placed for the most part amid surroundings repugnant to health or taste, at the dictation of the requirements of commerce; the pure pleasures of nature are sought elsewhere, in the Adirondacks or the White mountains, or at some one of the thousands of more or less fashionable watering places. It is the peculiarly happy lot of the residents of the Dual City and its environs that all that which is elsewhere gained at the price of annual tiresome wanderings lies ready at their gates. The concentration here of metropolitan wealth and population promotes social enjoyments and insures a high standard of social life, while it has added to instead of detracting from those natural charms which long ago made this the goal of hosts of travelers.

Still at the mouth of the Minnesota rise the walls of Fort Snelling, now softened into harmonious tints by the mellowing pencil of time. Still above the green of foliage and the glint of water are seen the white cliffs and the ancient towers, with the nation's flag, a bright bit of color, floating over all. But the scene, appealing as strongly as ever to the æsthetic sense, conveys now no thought of siege or sally. The frontier blockhouse has become an important army post, where are quartered the officers of a department with their families. The beauty of the old days is there, but to it has been added a new element — the beauty of cultivation, the possibility of social enjoyment, and all the humanities that attach themselves to the aggregation of peoples in great centres. Beautiful Minnehaha still casts upon the winds her silver veil, and every accessory is offenseless to the artistic sense. But where hundreds gazed upon the famous waterfall a few years ago, thousands now are visitors; and in brief space, by the authority of the state, this spot will become the centre of a park such as will have few equals anywhere. Minnetonka has suffered no subtraction of her charms, although the name has now become a familiar one in every corner of the land. Not a feature of her loveliness is marred; her winding channels, wooded shores, sequestered coves and magnificent islands, all are there. But these, too, the wand of wealth and civilization has touched and gifted with a new and higher character. Cottages and villas, witnessing the most exquisite taste, throng the shores. Mammoth hostelries might invite an army to comfortable entertainment. Multiplied facilities for transportation supply abundant means of access. With every season there come new and greater throngs of visitors from abroad. And here the social arts and graces hold their court. White Bear, with its similar attractions, its charming walks and fresh breezes and ever-sparkling waters, repeats the same story of the delights of watering place life combined with the conveniences of home and environed by the atmosphere of a great city. Yet this to the people of these cities is not a "resort," is not some spot to be reached by the sacrifice of comforts, the inconveniences of travel and the formalities of introduction to a new society; it is, in fact and in essence, only a portion of their home. And all within the circle, a few of whose points have been thus hastily sketched, enjoy the same rare fortune. The rich fields and pleasant hills that lie between, the rolling intervals that stretch up to the interurban boundaries on either side, the charming coppices, the glorious heights from which one sweep of the eye takes in an area of miles, with rival towers rising on either hand in the dim distance—all this with attractions undestroyed, but rather perennially new and perennially heightened, is the heritage of the people whose lines have fallen in the pleasant places of the Dual City.

The edict which is to make this the centre of urban life in the Northwest, as well as the centre of its natural beauties, has already gone forth. At the head of navigation must be gathered the commerce of the great valley, and through this gateway passes that of the further Northwest. An unequaled water power has built up manufactures that have outrun all competition, and are ever adding to themselves in a geometrical progression. With one-fifth of the population of the state busied within this fateful circle, what could ensue but that marvelous development which has taken by surprise even a nation accustomed to the miracles of enterprise! Hither drifts the commerce of some of the mightiest railway systems of the continent. Here is the clearing house for the financial operations of millions. Here is the centre of supply and of distribution from which flows the golden stream of wealth. Statistics everywhere tell of these movements of the age in their own potent language. And they have brought with them their invariable accomplishments, social development, appreciation of literature and the arts, a newer and broader field for intellectual intercourse, a wider humanity. It is toward the increase of those metropolitan features that the future points. In what is called the interurban tract, Hamline has become a social centre on the one side, while on the other lies Macalester, with the bright and growing district of Merriam Park near by. The establishment of state fair grounds within the dual area aids this concentration of population and improvement. The selection of another portion for a state park swells the tide. The destiny of a metropolis is already upon the Dual City. Possessed beyond recall of the advantages and beauties given by nature, assisted by the enterprise of the most vigorous race the world has ever seen, gathering impetus and momentum with the progress of each year, soon is the Dual City to behold mirrored in its fortune the fulfillment of that daring prophecy of one of America's great statesmen: "Here is the place, the central place, where the agriculture of the richest region of North America must pour out its tributes to the whole world. In our day, studying, perhaps, what might have seemed to others trifling or visionary, I had cast about for the future and ultimate central seat of the power of the North American people. I had looked at Quebec, New Orleans, at Washington and San Francisco and Cincinnati and St. Louis, and it had been the result of my conjecture that the seat of power for North America would yet be found in the valley of Mexico, and the glories of the Aztec capital would be surrendered in its becoming ultimately and at last the capital of the United States of America. But I have corrected that view; I now believe that the ultimate, last seat of government on this great continent will be found somewhere within a circle of radius not very far from the spot on which I stand, at the head of navigation on the Mississippi River."

HINTS ON INVESTMENTS.

Next to finding capital to invest, the most difficult task is to find a proper place for its investment, and many experienced financiers are put to their wits' end to find profitable employment for their spare funds.

The most experienced financier finds it profitable to consult his broker, and to persons not well posted in financial affairs the assistance of a reliable and responsible broker is indispensable.

RULES OF ETIQUETTE.

In the compilation of the following brief, hence incomplete, manual, the object in view is to present in a concise manner those leading rules of etiquette which are universally accepted by good society or especially applicable to the social conditions of our Dual City, and it is certainly more appropriate for a work of this character than the minute details of an exhaustive range which alone would fill a volume.

"Decorum," says a French writer, "is nothing less than the respect of one's self and others brought to bear upon every circumstance of life. In all relations, whether social or domestic, anything approaching coarseness, undue familiarity or levity of conduct is prolific of evil."

Bishop Beveridge says: "Never speak of a man's virtues before his face or his faults behind his back."

INTRODUCTIONS.

At evening parties the name of the arrival is announced to the assembled guests.

Persons who meet at a friend's house are presumed to be upon an equality and should not appear suspicious and formal.

The chivalry of etiquette assumes that the lady is the superior and that the gentleman is honored in the introduction.

Among ladies it is the younger who is introduced to the elder, the spinster to the married lady. Those of the same age and social standing are introduced to each other, but when a celebrity is present, less distinguished persons are presented to her.

The same applies to gentlemen.

Friends may introduce friends at the house of a mutual acquaintance, but an introduction from the hostess is more appropriate.

Minneapolis Brewing Co.,

LAGER BEER BREWERS.

General Office: Corner MARSHALL ST. and THIRTEENTH AVE., N. E.,

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

OUR BOTTLE BEER

IS THE QUEEN OF ALL TABLE BEERS.

Family Trade receives our particular attention. All orders are promptly attended to.

Drop us a postal, or ring us up, for a case of our celebrated Wiener or Extra Pale. Telephone 486.

Hasty and unauthorized introductions should be avoided; there should at least be some reason to believe that an introduction would be agreeable to both parties.

On meeting after an introduction, it is the part of the lady to acknowledge the acquaintance by recognition.

Among intimate acquaintances it is immaterial who bows first.

Persons usually limit their recognition of each other to a bow.

The custom of shaking hands is gradually disappearing from society. A lady is not expected to shake hands with a gentleman upon introduction, nor with a caller when he leaves. A gentleman has no right to extend his hand first to a lady. Friends shake hands without regard to rules.

At a social gathering a polite bow of recognition is sufficient, and better than shaking hands with all whom you happen to meet.

CALLING.

When making a call, a gentleman will carry his hat into the parlor in his hand. If his call is prolonged, he may place his hat on a table, but he should not allow his hostess to attend to this.

When a caller enters the hostess should rise, and may offer him her hand if she wishes. When he leaves, she should accompany him to the door of the drawing-room, if, as is usual, there is no servant to open the door. Guests whose age entitles them to special respect should be accompanied to the front door.

A formal call should not exceed a quarter of an hour.

Guests who meet in the same drawing-room may converse together without introduction, but no future recognition is necessary.

Calls in return for invitations received should be made within eight days after the event. Party calls and dinner calls are properly made within three or four days.

If the hostess has a day the call should be made on her first day after the reception.

First calls are void if not returned within a month.

Formal calls are made between 1 and 6 P. M., in the winter, not after dark. Ladies not receiving should be "Not at home;" the formula "Begs to be excused" is not polite.

A lady, in calling, is given a seat beside the mistress of the house. Gentlemen callers find chairs for themselves.

When a lady has a day, a call on her should be made on her day if possible.

Married men who wish to be considered "in society" should call with their wives once or twice a year on their friends.

It is not polite to invite a lady to an entertainment at your house if you have not called on her; an invitation cannot take the place of a visit, except in the case of a lady whose age gives her privileges.

A lady leaves her husband's cards with her own; her address should not be on her card unless she is a widow.

A card should be left for each person called on, but not more than three cards at any one house.

Residents will first call on strangers.

Strangers should send cards with their address to all acquaintances whose visits they desire. These cards may be sent by post.

All cards, left personally, should be turned down, either across the end or at the corner.

Cards left at receptions are never turned down.

A lady not in her own house does not rise on the departure of other visitors.

When making calls avoid anything either in conversation or action calculated to excite unfavorable remarks. Boisterousness is especially to be avoided; so are over-loud talk, whispering, criticisms on religious subjects and political disputations. It is exceedingly ill-bred to repeat scandal or to discuss people or topics of questionable character.

IN PUBLIC.

As much care should be taken to exhibit good breeding in public places as in drawing-rooms or at formal receptions. A true lady or gentleman never forgets the conventionalities of life under any circumstances. Always be considerate of the rights and feelings of others. While it is barely permissible for a gentleman to smoke in the streets, it would be exceedingly rude to smoke in the company of ladies.

INVITATIONS.

All invitations require an answer. For receptions where the number is limited, such as dinners, etc., the answer must be sent immediately.

DINNER PARTIES.

Guests should arrive at dinner parties five or ten minutes before the hour named in the invitation.

On going in to dinner, the gentleman of the house passes first with the lady who is the oldest, or the stranger, or for whom the dinner is given, on his arm. At table he places her on his right. The hostess brings up the rear on the arm of the most distinguished gentleman guest, to whom she gives the place at her right at the table. The second places are at the left of the host and hostess.

Cards, plain or ornamental, should be placed at each place with the name of the occupant.

When dinner is over, the gentlemen again offer their arms to the ladies and conduct them to the drawing-room, where coffee is served. After coffee, the gentlemen who smoke retire with the host to the smoking-room.

DRESS FOR GENTLEMEN.

Evening dress is always in order after dark, never in the day time. Either black or white ties may be worn with full dress; for balls a white tie is better.

For formal calls, day receptions, etc., the Prince Albert coat is best.

Gentlemen are expected to wear gloves on all formal occasions.

Gentlemen who accompany ladies to the theatre at night should always appear in evening dress.

GENERAL.

Look at those by whom you are addressed.

Do not boast of your birth, education, financial affairs, or your influential friends.

To frequently repeat the name of the person with whom you are conversing implies too much familiarity.

Keyholders will be particular to observe the following rules:

To give an alarm, go to the nearest box, open the door, pull the hook to the bottom of the slot once and let go; then close the door.

Do not pull the hook if the fire bell or small bell in the box is striking, as that indicates an alarm has already been given.

Keyholders, upon changing their location, will please return key, or leave word at office of Superintendent of Fire Alarm Telegraph, Second street corner Third avenue North.

An alarm is struck on engine house gongs in this way: Box 34 would be indicated by 3 blows (1—1—1), with a pause of 2 seconds between each blow, then a pause of 6 seconds, followed by 4 blows (1—1—1—1). This alarm is repeated 4 times with a pause of 14 seconds between each round; thus giving the alarm from Box 34 four different times.

Location of Fire Alarm Boxes.

Street and Avenue Guide.

Hennepin avenue is the dividing line between north and south, west of the river. Avenues are named numerically in regular order, north and south of it, streets at right angles to it, in regular order, from the river. Thus, Third avenue South, is the third avenue south of Hennepin avenue, running parallel to it. Third street N. is the third street on the west side of the river, running at right angles to Hennepin avenue. South of Grant and Superior avenue streets are numbered east and west of Nicollet avenue.

The same system is adopted on the east side of the river, Central avenue being the dividing line; E. for east (or eastern division) being added to N. or S.

In this directory the letters designating the division of the streets precede the names of streets, and follow names of avenues. Thus: N. E. Third, or N. Third, means Third street always, and Third avenue N. E., or Third N. E., always means the Third avenue Northeast.

THE INTERNATIONAL CYCLOPÆDIA

positively the latest complete publication before the public and first encylopædia ever published in which the first volume is as e as the last, thus opening up every avenue of knowledge to-day.

HUNDREDS BOTH AT HOME AND ABROAD HAVE INDORSED IT. WITH PLEASURE WE SUBMIT THE FOLLOWING:

Minneapolis, January, 1893.—To Mr. O. E. Kenyon—My Dear Sir: I have exam- with some care the "International Encyclopædia," and am much pleased with its gement, its accuracy and completeness. For home use, where all members of the y can go for assistance in the multitudinous topics that come under consideration, n my judgment unsurpassed, if it is even equalled. In Science, Philosophy, Art aw, where older members of the household might desire especially to examine, it is se, clear and full; while in biography, natural history and other subjects more ally interesting to youth, it is especially instructive and complete. I can cheer- commend it as a good work for either individual or family use.

ectfully, W. S. Pattee, Dean of the Law School of the University of Minnesota.

have now owned and consulted the International Cyclopædia a sufficient length ne to have become quite familiar with it and I take pleasure in testifying to its merits. It is a complete and comprehensive treatise of persons, things and s. The number of its subjects is simply amazing, and their discussion within the assigned, is made possible only by their ingenious arrangement, and a pleasing- ncise though lucid treatment. In the intensive style of this admirable work, its s seem to have caught the spirit of the age, that protests against redundancy literary matters, and in most other things. The International is an intestimable on to any library. S. M. Owens, Editor Farm, Stock and Home.

GRAPHY Is but one of International's 53,000 subjects, yet under this import- ant heading are treated 13,000 lives, both living and completed. y reason of its admirable arrangement and excellent system of cross references, lex volume is needed. Address,

The Only Disinfectant and Deodizer Combined

In the world that has been granted United States Patent and is recognized as filling the bill by Health Departments, Hotel Keepers, Car Companies, Hospitals, etc., is the

P. W. & H. PURIFIER.

They are pronounced by Scientists and Physicians to be the most powerful disinfectants and germ destroyers used, wherever it has been introduced.

All we ask of the public is to make a trial. The Purifier is solidly constructed and neatly nickel-plated, and is only $4, including a month's supply of fluid, and the fluid costs only $1 a quart, and two quarts will suffice for a year.

Better supply yourself with one rather than run the risk of breathing foul air, which is one of the causes of all diseases.

Write for catalogue and testimonials. Address all orders for the Northwest to
